14. Teflon (PTFE) provides a faster PCB interconnect that can help in meeting timing requirements by providing less delay per unit length. It would also then allow for a more relaxed component placement since they could be further distant from each other.

One other advantage would be that larger components could be used as the longer flight time through them could be compensated for with faster PCB traces.